“This book breaks new ground in taking on the difficult question of how to define, operationalise and measure emotions in international politics. The book not only represents the methodological spectrum, from positivist to interpretivist, but explores a treasure trove of specific methods, while also showing how they are applied in the analysis of diverse emotional contexts. The book is must reading for students and scholars of both emotion and methodology.”

– K. M. Fierke, Professor of International Relations, University of St Andrews, UK

"Researching Emotions is a book with many gems, new and rich avenues for studying how emotions really matter in world politics. Anyone who wants to know how the work on emotions impacts methodological and epistemological concerns of IR must read this volume."

– Thierry Balzacq, Francqui Research Chair, University of Namur, Belgium & Visiting Professor, London School of Economics and Political Science, UK

This edited volume is the first to discuss the methodological implications of the ‘emotional turn’ in International Relations. While emotions have become of increasing interest to IR theory, methodological challenges have yet to receive proper attention. Acknowledging the plurality of ontological positions, concepts and theories about the role of emotions in world politics, this volume presents and discusses various ways to research emotions empirically. Based on concrete research projects, the chapters demonstrate how social-scientific and humanities-oriented methodological approaches can be successfully adapted to the study of emotions in IR. The volume covers a diverse set of both well-established and innovative methods, including discourse analysis, ethnography, narrative, and visual analysis. Through a hands-on approach, each chapter sheds light on practical challenges and opportunities, as well as lessons learnt for future research. The volume is an invaluable resource for advanced graduate and post-graduate students as well as scholars interested in developing their own empirical research on the role of emotions.

Maéva Clément is a Research Associate and Teaching Fellow at the Institute for International Politics at the Helmut-Schmidt-University Hamburg, Germany.

Eric Sangar is a FNRS Research Fellow based at the University of Namur, Belgium and an associated researcher at the Centre Emile Durkheim of Sciences Po Bordeaux, France.